Q: Mapbox Java API needs a refresh token but the docs don't say how I'm trying to use the Mapbox Java API. I want to fetch my map tiles using the default location (described in Mapbox to API), in order to use it with my own app, I need to register an application with Mapbox (see here). To register an app I need to provide the API user, which also needs a refresh token. To obtain a new access token I need to sign in to my account on mapbox.com, create a new client and send them the refresh token, which they give me. The problem is, the docs don't explain how to get the refresh token. The client endpoint documentation says that the parameters will be {"accessToken": , but there is no explanation on how to get the token from the user. A: It's in the first link you gave, the bottom part of the tutorial.

Its effects can be variable and can be reduced by metabolizing enzymes. These enzymes are often implicated in adverse drug reactions (ADRs), therefore, identification of drugs and/or metabolites that inhibit these enzymes is essential for a safer use of aspirin. Coumarins comprise a huge group of natural compounds known for their wide biological activities. The aim of this study was to identify the metabolizing enzymes inhibition by Coumarins and to provide structure-metabolizing enzyme relationships. We studied the inhibitory activity of Coumarins toward fourteen human liver metabolizing enzymes. The metabolites generated by these enzymes were also identified. The impact of the structural features on inhibitory activity was studied. Preliminary results showed that the inhibitory activity of Coumarins is huge and the inhibitory activity is highly dependent on the chemical structure of the Coumarins. Moreover the generated metabolites were also studied and no side effect for this class of compounds was noticed. The Council meeting begins at 12:00 noon and will last approximately 2 hours. Replay of the meeting will be available the night of the meeting. We encourage participation by the public at the meeting. What's new:

: The Benfica manager gapped Gabriel Batistuta, the starting 11 of the season The season has not even kicked off and there is already something quite exceptional in our house at a certain moment in the Benfica season. Or rather a set of exceptional circumstances. In these very spheres called 'Torgal Coutinho' are the person in charge of football and strategy, Rui Costa, the directors, the sporting and technical staff, and an assortment of friends, in several different clubs, and within both Benfica and their city rivals, Sporting, and other games that have taken place recently, such as the extended Champions League match against Valencia. Just a few days ago, we ended up seeing Vítor Pereira's team play Valencia. The match ended with the point for Rui Costa's side, which includes many friends of mine (the press officer of every single one of them, with the exception of, yes, the 'Torgal Coutinho' who lost his glasses, so now he is, with the permission of the tournament directors, his dad's eyes!), on the pitch or in the stands. More interesting things happened off the pitch than on it: a whole social life for most of our people, after the match and after the match, during weekends, after work days, when just anything can happen: some couples go out on their own, there are friendly matches, parties, the cinema, a game of football in the park, is it a wedding? We could go on and on. It all goes on. Which brings us to Benfica today. Where we are a little behind some months. For reasons I will explain to you this summer. Sitting in the car on the way from home to my first day at work today, it's over 2.30 already and the cold sweat of summer is starting to soak my shirt and chest. What an exhilarating and comforting feeling this is, compared to the fear that starts in your stomach when you hear the beep of your air conditioning. A precise and uncomfortable feeling, a feeling of lot of fear for something that cannot be avoided, because it will happen that way no matter what and no matter how hard you try to explain to yourself. As if you have to keep a gaze fixed on something, so that your subconscious cannot confuse you, distract you, direct your thinking and so that today and the day after you keep an eye on this thing that you cannot
